Barking Cat Jewelry™ Gives Back to Lexington Humane Society with Charitable Giving Program

Barking Cat Jewelry will donate 50% of all jewelry sold at Lexington Humane Society back to organization

ATLANTA – August 21, 2010 – Passionate about helping pets in need, Barking Cat Jewelry is excited to announce their new charitable giving program which gives back to pet rescue groups across the country. The partnership affords each rescue group the opportunity to sell Barking Cat Jewelry pendants and keep 50% of the profits for the benefit of their organization.

Currently partnering with Lexington, Kentucky's Lexington Humane Society, Barking Cat Jewelry has 15 different cat, dog and horse themed pendants available for sale in the organization's gift shop, including a custom piece hand stamped with the group's motto, "Adopt Love."

"We've always believed that adoption is the best option when it comes to choosing a pet and Barking Cat Jewelry is a great way for our organization and our pet parents to help spread that message," said Susan Malcomb, president of Lexington Human Society.

"From volunteering at shelters to creating jewelry to raise awareness about pet adoption, I've always tried to give back to non-profit organizations doing important work to help deserving pets find loving homes," said Barking Cat Jewelry designer Ann Finley. "I hope that this new partnership will help raise funds for Lexington Humane Society and that we will soon be able to create similar partnerships with rescue groups across the country."
